HANDSOME TWO-YEAR-OLD COLT.

Early in the season of 1905 a two-year-old colt showed form in the West that was wonderful. He heat the bety youngsters that could be raced against him, and then came East. Oak Duke is his name. His class was so high that H. K. Knapp paid $15,000 for him. Since he became the property of the Oneck Stables, Oak Duke seems to have fallen somewhat from his high estate, and has been unable to win. Hhis owner, however, believes it is merely a temporary disability, and due to overtraining while at Saratoga. He expects his handsome colt to come to hand again soon and

JOCKEYS CAGED LIKE BIRDS OR ANIMALS

Riders Confined Behind Wire Screens and Guarded By Race Track Police to Prevent Collusion Between Them and the Betters.

(Special to The Times-Dispatch.)

NEW YORK, Nov. 5.—During the recent racing season here many innovations were planned, among them being one of handling the jockeys.

While riders of race horses are paid princely salaries they are not, always above suspicion, and the officials of the Jockey Club finally decided not to take any chances. Fearing that the boy jockeys might fail into the snares of the turf plungers—snares of the sales and were looking at the other interest the process of the turf plungers—snares of the snares of the turf plungers—snares of the snares of the snares of the turf plungers—snares of the snares of the afternoon except the owners of the horses, the trainers and the officials of the track.

This move was made in order to eliminate any possibility of fraud, and to keep the touts and the runners of bookmakers from learning stable secrets.

Of course, the jockeys did not relish this new move, but they were obliged to submit to it. The first day the order went into effect and they appeared behind the wire screen stable lads lined up and jeeringly yelled: "How do you like being in de jug?" "Ya! Ya! Now you have got to be good."

This corralling of the jockeys was tried first at the fall meeting at Belmont Park, and proved so successful that the innovation was adopted at Jamalca with equal satisfaction to all but the jockeys.

Caspar Whitney Thinks Foot-Ball Committee is Ignoring Public's Demand.

RESPECTS CAMP'S ATTITUDE

But Argues That Latter Should Resign and Give Publicity to Existing Friction.

(Special to The Times-Dispatch.) NEW YORK, November 5 .- Writing in "Outing" on the foot-ball rules situa-tion, Caspar' Whitney says, in part; "With so much of a serious import touching one of our manifest and most worth-while games it is regretable that some one of the committee has not been big enough to rise over the school-boy resentment harbored against those who love Rome more than Caesar, and tell Common sense. At present the committee common sense. At present the common sense and the sense opinion of the source of his vast wealth to the sense opinion of the source of his vast wealth opinion opinion of his vast wealth opinion of his vast wealth opinion opin why the committee thus files in the face not only of public desire but of common sense. At present the committee is a living example of the late Commodore Vanderbilt's widely advertised opinion of the source of his vast wealth. "The public be danned, said the foundor of the Vanderbilt's widely advertised opinion of the source of his vast wealth. "The public be danned, said the foundor of the Vanderbilt millions when a considerate railway officials was presenting a case for reform where the people's rights were disregarded; and "the public be danned," said also the foot-ball committee when it closed its ears to the intelligent and wide-spread request for lite damned, said also the foot-ball rule of its stupid and dangerous features. Not only the 'public be damned' but the college faculties, the parents, the boys and the game itself also be damned, said the committee, and Mr. Dashieli, the chairman despite the fact that Camp, has probably forgotten more foot-ball than the chairman ever knew.

Health of the Game

Respects Camp's Attitude.

Respects Camp's Attitude.

"When a body of gentlemen for one reason or another fail, out of sympathy with those who have called them to duty; it is customary the world over for them to withdraw without being requested to do so. There are some members of the football rules committee of whom little in the way of higher appreciation of their duty was expected. Of several others, notably Professor Dennis, of Cornel, and Professor Fine, of Princeton, much along his line was naturally to be expected. How these two gentlemen or the universities of these two professors can reconcile their retention of faculty office with their retention on the football committee is something that I leave for the explanation of Presidents Schuman and Wilson.

So far as the public now knows, Mr. Camp is the only man on the committee who responded to the appeal for rule revision, and while we respect him or his attitude we would have respected him still more if on so important a question he had; signified his lack of sympathy with the committee's stupid indifference to its duty by resigning and making public his reasons for doing so. "It is no pleasure for me to write in this vein, and certainly there is not a man on the committee's stupid indifference to its duty by resigning and making public his reasons for doing so. "It is no pleasure for me to write in this vein, and certainly there is not a man on the committee's stupid indifference to its duty by resigning and making public his reasons for doing so.
